BRACING FOR SANDY

Reuters

warned.

Tens of millions of East Coast residents scrambled Sunday to prepare for Hurricane Sandy, which could make landfall as the largest storm to hit the U.S., bringing battering winds, flooding and even heavy snow.

The massive storm, which has already killed 66 people in the Caribbean, was headed toward a densely populated region that includes Washington, New York and Boston, and its effects could be felt for hundreds of miles, officials

It could be the largest storm to hit the U.S., according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

New York, Washington, D.C., and other big cities closed their transit systems and schools and ordered residents of low-lying areas to evacuate before a storm surge that could reach II feet. They warned that power outages could last for days.

President Obama asked residents to heed the orders of state and local authorities to protect themselves from Sandy.

"This is a serious and big storm," Obama said after a briefing at the federal government's storm response center in Washington. "We don't yet know where it's going to hit, where we're going to see the biggest impacts."

Sandy blew the presidential race off course, forcing Obama and Republican challenger Mitt Romney to cancel scheduled campaign stops.

CHICAGO STORMS?

Lake Michigan may see waves up to 22 feet in the wake of the storm. See Page 7 for more.

Officials ordered many school closures, New Jersey casinos and Broadway theaters prepared to close, airlines got ready to halt flight activity in the New York area, and residents cleared store shelves of vital supplies

Amtrak, the passenger rail service, canceled nearly all service on the Eastern seaboard on Monday and would halt its service north of New York along the Northeast corridor. Airlines flying into and out of New York's three major airports were all expected to cease flight activity on Sunday night.

New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg ordered the evacuation of low-lying areas of New York City, from upscale parts of lower Manhattan to waterfront housing projects in the outer boroughs, that are home to some 375,000 people.

"If you refuse to evacuate you're not only putting yourself at risk but also the first responders who will have put themselves at risk in an emerlandfall. getty images gency," Bloomberg told a news conference.

In Bridgeport, Conn., Fire Department Captain Frank Rivera was ordering residents of 300 waterfront homes to evacuate.

"A lot of them are on their way out but some of them are thinking about [Hurricane] Irene and how they didn't get damage and I tell them it's two different animals," Rivera said, referring to the August 2011 hurricane that brought severe flooding to parts of New Jersey and Vermont.

FREAK SHOW

Hurricane Sandy is expected to hit the eastern U.S. with freakish power as it meets a cold front during a rare convergence of weather factors that is expected to steer the storm inland. Here is a look at some of the reasons why the event dubbed "Frankenstorm" by some weather watchers is so unusual, and why it could be one of the worst U.S. storms in decades. REUTERS

HISTORIC STORM

» Hurricane Sandy will join with a cold front in an event similar to Hurricane Hazel in 1954, said Bruce Sullivan, a meteorologist with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Hydrometeorological Prediction Center.

- » One factor that sets
 Hurricane Sandy
 apart from last year's Hurricane Irene, which caused $4.3 billion in damage, is that it will produce more than a foot of snow in higher elevations, especially in West Virginia, said Eric Leister, meteorologist with accuweather.com.
 That could lead to widespread power outages.
- » Hurricane Sandy also presents more potential for flooding than Irene because it will produce more storm surges, particularly along northern New Jersey, New York City and Long Island, said meteorologist Dan Petersen with the Hydrometeorological Prediction Center.

UNUSUAL PATH

» Most tropical storms that make landfall in the mid-Atlantic region move northeast and out toward the ocean. Sandy will move northwest and unleash its fury over a greater area of land than the average storm, Sullivan said. » Sandy will be led inland on its destructive path by a high-pressure system over eastern Canada and a storm system moving southeast across the Tennessee Valley, Sullivan said. Those two systems and their winds will act like a "steering mechanism" and draw Sandy to the northwest.

VAST WIND FIELD

» Hurricane Sandy will generate heavy winds covering an area more than 500 miles in diameter, Sullivan said. The hugely destructive Hurricane Andrew in 1992 unleashed heavy winds over an area about one-fifth that size.

» The large wind storms generated by Hurricane Sandy will create major flooding and storm surges, said Chris Landsea, hurricane forecaster at the National Hurricane Center. Coastal areas will be inundated with up to 8 feet of storm surges, which will be devastating for low-lying areas, he said.

Please do not scare the men

Correct me if I'm wrong, but has this not been the most weirdly misogynistic election season since-I want to say-women got the vote?

Here's my theory: Men are beginning to figure out that it's all over for us, and we're having a society-wide freakout about it.

It's not just Indiana Senate candidate Richard Mourdock proclaiming that God wants women to have their rape babies or Missouri Senate candidate Todd Akin with his scintillating insights into magic vaginas.

Though abortion has long been a divisive issue (and there certainly are reasonable, secular reasons to object to it), this election season the issue has entered the fray almost entirely through the frame of rape, which is, um, strange to say the least.

This all follows that month-long conflagration over whether women should have unequivocal access to contraception, at which point I felt like the majority of young people were looking at each other in the eyebrowraising way Jim looks at the camera in "The Office."

Once all the artificial barriers we erected to keep women our indentured servants were removed, it turns out they are great at just about everything. We can certainly still lift beavier stuff than most women-and you'd better believe they'll still come running to us with a jar that needs to be opened-but for the most part women are taking over the economy, graduating at vastly higher rates from colleges and quickly breaking those pesky glass ceilings in business and government. According to Hanna Rosin's "The End of Men," the Great Recession simply accelerated these trends.

Personally, I've noticed the binders full of women who I've dated post-college all make (immensely) more money than me. This is fine because I don't measure my masculinity in money. I measure it in how many cheap beers I can drink and still perform relatively well at Pop-a-Shot. (Just a note: That's a barroom basketball game, not some weird sex thing; following numerous cheap beers, I can never perform well at weird sex things.)

But I don't think this is the case for some men. For guys like Richard Mourdock, their penises are whispering in their ears, "Your sons are all going to be stay-at-home dads." This terrifies them, and their first instinct is to resort to a 19th century mindset in which they draw schematics of the uterus to figure out where they get to plant their legislative flags.

Then again, I won't lie: I have a selfish, vested interest in this massive societal shift toward female empowerment. I much prefer women who are smart, confident, eat contraception like Cheerios and just kind of kick the world's ass as an afterthought.

That is, until the first time I see a woman pop open a jar by calmly tapping a butter knife into the lid to relieve the pressure. Then I'm going to freak the %#@S out. REDEVESPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR STEPHEN MARKLEY IS THE AUTHOR OF "THE GREAT DYSMORPHIA" AND "PUBLISH THIS BOOK."

CHICAGO ON WAVE WATCH

STORM EXPECTED TO PLAY HAVOC WITH LAKE MICHIGAN

Chicago Tribune

The megastorm bearing down on New York, Washington and other parts of the East Coast is stranding Chicago travelers and could whip up Lake Michigan waves taller than doubledecker buses.

At O'Hare, passengers scrambled Sunday to get to or from the Northeast before Hurricane Sandy made landfall.

The hurricane is expected to combine with a winter weather system bearing down from the west to create a superstorm dubbed *Frankenstorm."

Bob McChrystal was waiting in the United Airlines terminal for his wife to arrive home from Washington. She was scheduled to leave late Sunday evening, but that flight was canceled. After waiting out several standby flights, she finally was on her way home by early afternoon.

Not far from McChrystal, Chicagoans Phyllis and Ray Green had just arrived home from Washington after moving up their flight. Many airlines waived change fees for passengers traveling to or from the Atlantic Coast in the coming days, allowing them to leave Sunday without paying more.

"We'd never heard of this hurricane until we were there," Phyllis Green said. "And the predictions kept getting more dire."

Hurricane Sandy will affect weather patterns in Chicago. The National Weather Service issued a lakeshore flood warning that will be in effect from 1 a.m. Tuesday until 4 p.m. Wednesday. Lake Michigan waves fueled by Sandy's winds could increase in size quickly by Monday night, National Weather Service meteorologist Richard Castro warned.

The Cook County lakefront will likely see waves of 16 to 22 feet. A typical windy day in Chicago might bring waves of 4 to 6 feet, Castro said.

Lakefront high-rise residents should secure items on their balconies, Castro advised, and exercisers should avoid the lakeshore. With gusts of 60 mph possible, some wind damage could occur, he said.

"The fact we're seeing impact in the wind out here in the Midwest-the magnitude of this storm is really rare," Castro said.

Sandy is so large, he added, that it's also preventing the cool weather system over Chicago from moving out. Temperatures aren't expected to rise higher than 50 degrees through at least Thursday.

Over the last five years, the Google Street View team has used all sorts of vehicles-including cars, vans, trikes and snowmobiles—to help it collect imagery of places such as Antarctica, the Amazon and the Great Barrier Reef.

But to photograph the trails of the Grand Canyon, the team broke out a new piece of equipment: the Trekker. The Trekker is a backpack with a round camera system sticking out of the top. Nathan Olivarez-Giles, a Wired reporter who was there as the engineers descended

Top court goes to the dogs

Two dogs, a chocolate Labrador retriever named Franky and a German shepherd named Aldo, should have their day at the Supreme Court.

The court is scheduled on Wednesday to hear Florida's appeal of two decisions by that state's highest court that found the detection of drugs by trained police dogs had violated the constitutional ban on unreasonable searches and seizures under the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution.

These arguments involve distinctly different issues: whether a dog can sniff outside a home without a warrant, and how qualified a dog must be to do a legitimate sniff.

They give the Supreme Court a chance to extend, or limit, prior decisions giving police a long leash to use dogs, including for suitcases at airports and cars stopped at checkpoints. At least 23 states joined each of Florida's appeals, calling drug-detecting dogs "essential" at the forefront of efforts to stop illegal production and sales.

TVSTAR INTERVIEWS

As RedEye's TV writer, Curt Wagner has interviewed A LOT of actors and producers. He couldn't possibly make a list of his favorite interview subjects, so consider this list the 10 that were fun, insightful or special in some other way. Curt's already thinking of all the folks he left off this list ...

Lou Diamond Phillips A phone interview and Twitter

A phone interview and Twitter back-and-forths led to him teaching me about whiskey at a hotel bar in Vancouver, British Columbia. This acting yet has amazing stories.

Philip Winchester

The "Strike Back" actor is one of those people I've interviewed who I know is going places. It's fun to get them on their way there. And success couldn't come to a nicer guy.

Matt Lauria

The "Friday Night Lights" actor and I met at a Lincoln Park coffee house to chat about "The Chicago Code," We finished up nearly three hours later—after talking about much more than planned.

Sharon Gless

I'm not usually nervous doing interviews, but I had butterflies talking to this legend about her role on "Burn Notice." She put me at ease instantly.

Elijah Wood

I scored the first interview with the "Lord of the Rings" star that wasn't for a national publication before the debut of his first TV project, "Wilfred." A fun and insightful chat.

Andy Whitfield

A month before Starz's "Spartacus" debuted, Whitfield was nervous about how it would be received. He didn't have to be; he made it must-see TV. We talked probably five other times, which made his death before Season 2 that much sadder for me.

Charlie Day

What can I say about this co-star of "It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia"? He's a riot! And fun at a party, or a press room, or the hallway to the bathroom ...

Danny Pudi

The first time we talked, I asked this Chicago native and former RedEye reader about his old "butt-dialer" commercial. He didn't miss a beat: "My last name is Pudi, so that's kind of a joke in itself."

Walton Goggins

Never met the man faceto-face, but he's just as magnetic over the phone as he is playing Boyd Crowder on "Justified." A fascinating actor.

Katrina Law

Who doesn't love to be hugged? Katrina Law, formerly on "Spartacus" and "Legend of the Secker," knows how to hug.

RedEye

Every week, NFL teams' toughness is examined. Even though the Bears looked like one of the best teams in the league and were playing struggling Carolina on Sunday, question marks remain. How would the Bears play after a short week? Were Jay Cutler's sore ribs feeling OK? Could Cam Newton recover from general ineptitude? As it turns out, a Robbie Gould field goal as time expired was enough to boost the NFC North-leading Bears to 6-1.

NFC NORTH	w	L	GB
BEARS	6	1	-

Green Bay	5	3	117
Detroit	3	4	3

"To get out with a 'W,' we're happy, but anytime you win there's things to improve on, just like a loss, so we've got to keep getting better," said Cutler, who was booed several times by the Soldier Field crowd. "I'd boo us too. ... It was a boo-worthy performance. It was pathetic what we put out there offensively."

You can't argue with the result, however. Here's how six difference makers fared on our toughness scale in Sunday's game. TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED.

All game the announcers talked about how Lovie Smith preferred that Jennings cover the Panthers' Steve Smith. The decision looked iffy at times but eventually paid off. In addition to a diving interception toward the end of the first half. Jennings picked off a pass and glided into the end zone midway through the fourth quarter to give the Bears the lead. And even though the Soldier Field turf gets an assist on the play—Steve Smith slipped—Jennings had to do the rest.

TOUGHNESS

The Panthers' stud receiver burned the Bears for 118 yards on seven catches, several of them acrobatic and a few with Bears cornerback Tim Jennings attached to his jersey. He wasn't afraid to trash-talk either, getting in Chris Conte's face as well as Brian Urlacher's. That said, he dropped what would have been a touchdown pass with 2:38 left that would have put the game away. D'oh.

PANTHERS DEFENSE

This didn't look like a team that entered Sunday giving up 245.8 passing yards per game. Carolina sacked Jay Cutler six times and frustrated the Bears offense to the point where the Soldier Field crowd booed the home team more than once. All told, the Panthers surrendered just 210 yards of offense Sunday. Which would be outstanding, except for the fact they couldn't shut down the Bears on the final drive.

TOUGHNESS

Even though he didn't get in the end zone, the wide receiver was clutch all afternoon. Marshall caught four passes on the drive that led to the winning field goal and delivered several key blocks that resulted in Bears first downs earlier in the game. He also limped off the field in the third quarter, only to return shortly thereafter when his team needed him most.

PANTHERS SPECIAL TEAMS

Throughout the game, the Panthers refused to send it deep on kickoffs. What, were they that scared of Devin Hester, who has yet to return a kick for a touchdown this season? And what happened on that pathetic 6-yard punt? About the "toughest" thing you can say about this unit is the kicker nailed all five of his field goals, including a 45-yarder that put Carolina ahead with 2:32 remaining. Which isn't saying much.

TOUGHNESS

The Bears QB looked doomed from the start Sunday. Speculation was rampant on social media that he cussed out his own fans as he walked into the locker room at halftime. He took hit after hit, lost two fumbles and threw an interception-two if you count the one on the failed 2-point conversion. Yet he also led the Bears on two fourth-quarter scoring drives, including the game-winner. Even if Cutler's ribs and ego are aching, the rest of him is just fine.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

The moon is inspiring you to enjoy sexy pillow chat or flirty text messages with someone. You could find yourself in a situation where someone develops strong feelings for you while you're feeling more ambivalent.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21 You might need a referee this week as you and your partner engage in passionate discussions. One of you wants to take things to the next level while the other is dragging his or her feet. Mercury says seek advice.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19 With the moon opposite your sign, you're questioning the current flow of your relationship. Maybe you and your honey have developed certain habits and you're feeling bored. Shake things up.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18 You're in a restless mood thanks to the sun. If you're in a relationship, you could be wondering if your partner is the right person for you. If you're single, you'll be eager to hook up with somebody single and fabulous.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Trust your instincts. The moon is making you super psychic. If you have a feeling that you should be somewhere at a certain time, go.

You might meet someone flirty and fun who understands you in a mysterious and amazing way.

Aries March 21-April 19 The moon is making you schizophrenic. Part of you wants to be with a new cutie, but another part is still deeply in lust with somebody else. If you're forced to make a commitment this week, your head will explode.

Taurus April 20-May 20 All that pent-up frustration and sexual longing are building to a crescendo. The full moon is making all those feelings more intense. If you've been nursing a huge crush, you'll want to make a confession about it.

Gemini May 21-June 21 Go with the social flow this week. If friends invite you out to dinner, join them. If business colleagues suggest a working lunch, say yes. The moon is helping you find stimulation with a rich variety of cool people.

Cancer June 22-July 22 A relationship that was getting better is suddenly getting worse. You can thank a moon square for that. Just when you and your honey had resolved your differences, something else begins annoying the hell out of you.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22 You'll be surrounded by drama queens this week, thanks to outrageous Mercury. As a Fire sign, you'll be tempted to join in the chaos and the emotional angst. But you don't have to scream to get your partner's attention. Find a calmer way to communicate.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22 As Mercury, your planetary ruler, prepares to go retrograde for a few weeks, you could be regretting that recent fling. Maybe it wasn't such a good idea to hook up with your ex.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 You could become attracted to someone who is feeling gloomy about life. As a positive person, you're great at being a cheerleader. Venus is encouraging you to lift this person's spirits in a gentle and flirty way.

'American Idol' is ancient history as the former champ takes control of his music

Luis

Somez s Igomez@ tribune.com Lee DeWyze was hesitant about future wife Jonna Walsh walking down the aisle in July to the song he wrote specifically for her. The Mount Prospect native and former "American Idol" winner was worried guests would see it as cheesy. But after giving it some thought, he agreed to have the song, "Who Would Have Known," played at their wedding in Camarillo, Calif. Then he performed it at the reception.

How did it go?

"Perfectly," DeWyze said over the phone from the L.A. area last week. "That was a cool moment that we had."

The song will be featured on DeWyze's next album, which he expects to release in the next few months. DeWyze is currently on tour performing his new songs and will play Nov. 5 at Lincoln Hall, in addition to performing Saturday at the Cures Gala at the Fairmont Chicago Millennium Park. (DeWyze said he lost his grandfather to lung cancer.)

Asked if his life feels different now that he's married, DeWyze said it does—in a good way.

"We're running around doing our own thing, but we make it work," DeWyze said of Walsh, an actress he met while filming the music video for "Sweet Serendipity." "We find time to support each other and be there for each other. She's coming out with me on tour and will be there for [Saturday's] gala."

DeWyze has yet to sign with a record label since parting ways with RCA last year. And without a label making requests or a tight deadline to meet, DeWyze feels he can truly be himself. He frequently tweets videos of himself performing new songs, whether they're finished or not, to his 100,000-plus followers online.

As has been well documented, DeWyze never quite felt like he fit the "American Idol" mold and has publicly butted heads with executive producer Nigel Lythgoe since appearing on the singing competition.

"It's like driving a car without a backsteat driver," De Wyze said. "At the end of the day, you'll still get to your destination, only you're not being told when to turn left or right and when to speed up. I've played the new songs for people and they can't believe it: "This is what you're making now?" Everyone seems pleasantly happy. No one is more excited than me. I feel like once I put it out, people will be like 'Oh, I get it now."

The yet-to-be-named album will have a progressive, indie folk sound, which DeWyze said is where his heart has always been.

"I'm looking at all this now as more of a career than just, 'Hey, I put out an album,' "DeWyze said. "I plan on putting out several albums and will continue writing and touring. That's where I belong."

That's when Taylor Swift's 2013 tour arrives in Chicago. The country queen should be able to squeeze in at least three breakups between now and that show, right?

'Deeply sorry'

Well, that was a short honeymoon. Justin Timberlake (below) posted an open letter on his official website Friday, apologizing for a video that was screened at his wedding to Jessica Biel showing homeless people congratulating the couple. "I had no knowledge of its existence," he wrote. "I had absolutely ZERO contribution to it." JT defended his friends but wrote, "I am deeply sorry to anyone who was offended by the video."
